- social sciences (a combination of basic subjects in economies and law and philosophy, socialogy, international relations and other subjects) meant for persons intended to work in the public administration, or journalists, etc. [3 1/2 years].

Tuition in the teachers' courses at the Faculties of Natural and Technical Sciences and of Social Sciences will be prevalently given in French and English [Spanish is being considered], according to the possibilities of the individual faculties and the number of students enrolled.

, Tuition in the field of social sciences will be given exclusively in these languages. Lectures in the French language, commenced in 1962/1963, will be extended by lectures in English in 1963/1964, providing a sufficient number of students is enrolled.

Courses of study at the Faculties of the University of 17th November are based on syllabuses which are adapted to the needs of the developing countries and their requirements as to the general background of specialists with a university training. The only subjects not included in the syllabuses are those which have no importance with a view to the needs of the developing countries and those which would reduce the applicability of the course by too narrow a specialisation.

On completion of his studies, the foreign student will receive a diploma conferring upon him the respective academic degree (Master, Eachelor of Vedicine and Bachelor of Surgery, etc.). Czechoslovak Universities and Technical Universities confer a total of 40 degrees. On request, the University of 17th November will issue to the graduate a French, English or Spanish version of his diploma, giving the degree corresponding to such as are employed for a like achievement in the part of the world the graduate comes from.

II.

Inasfer as prospective undergraduates are not directly enrolled in a course of study where tuition is given in one of the foreign languages indicated above, at one of the faculties of the University of 17th November, they will be enrolled at the Preparatory Faculty of the University in order to attain a working knowledge of the Czech [or Slovak] language and, if necessary, to supplement or extend their knowledge of the respective subjects at the secondary-school level so that they may be brought up to the standard of proficiency required by the departments of universities where they intend to study. This regards in particular proficiency in such subjects as mathematics, chemistry and physics. This one-year course of study is also intended to enable the foreign student to get gradually used to the ways of life and conditions in Czechoslovskia. A similar preparatory course, of a shorter duration, is also available to post-graduate students. On completing the preparatory course, the students sit for examinations in the Czech [or Slovak] language and in the specialized subjects. The certificate granted them on passing these examinations is required for their enrollment at the faculty where they intend to study.

III.

Applicants, men or women aged from 17 to 30, may apply for enrollment to study in Czechoslovakia, provided that they have completed their secondary school education and are entitled to study at an establishment of higher education (i.e. they have, for instance, passed their First and Second parts of the Escalaurést or have been awarded the General Certificate of Education or some other analogous certificate). It is expected that such certificates confirm that the applicant has successfully completed 11 to
